

Consumer lag is how far a Kafka consumer group is behind its committed offsets. It grows when processing takes longer than arrivals and shrinks when the group catches up.

Backpressure shows up as lag, but the cause is usually downstream: a slow sink, a rebalance storm, or a partition that is far hotter than its neighbours.